Genre: Magical Realism

Solomon's Pond discusses life through the twists and turns of getting older, caring for sick parents, and the challenges of an uninspiring career. Told through the voice of Thalia, a thirty something college teacher, who discovers all is not right within the world, or at least the world she has created.

The night I had driven to Zeus, with its darkness and stars, had been filled with hope. I prefer the night and I prefer winter. The short days and the long nights encased within a safe womb of blackness. The days of summer are long and the nights so short that I never feel truly rested in summer. The bright days of sun and energy are physical but the winter and nights feel spiritual. The female versus the male again, the god and the goddess once more competing for dominance over our souls. The moon radiates out a creamy light amongst the blackness with such a gentle glow of love.
